

LOVING THE HATE

Rezumat: The passion for hate is especially related to the problematics of adolescence. On one hand, this is true because teenagers look for models to shape their life appetite and they very often meet as a model their parents' appetite for unhappiness; on the other hand, since they "already hate", some of the teenagers become the actors to act out the hate cumulated by other past generations. This hate entertains a problematic identity which artificially confronts itself with the fascination arisen. This may seem to be attractive at an age when many satisfactions are put off, even if we speak about the hate for the others or about self-hate or the hates that "valorise" someone.
